French rabbit Wines to Hop through American Forests

Boisset America is thrilled to announce that its line of eco-friendly French rabbit wines has joined American Forests to help restore the ecosystem, one tree at a time.

On March 1, French rabbit wines hopped over from the South of France with a plan to revolutionize the wine world. The wines, vintage-dated Pinot Noir, Chardonnay, Merlot, and Cabernet Sauvignon, are packaged in innovative, octagonal-shaped, 1L Tetra Pak containers called ePods™. Ecological benefits of this unique container include reducing packaging waste by 90% compared to glass bottles, reducing CO₂ emissions and fuel consumption from transportation trucks (since fewer vehicles are needed to transport the ePods), the renewable materials used to create the package – paper from sustainably-grown forests, and finally, being completely recyclable.

And now, drinking French rabbit wine restores forests. For every four ePods sold, a tree is planted through American Forests.

American Forests (www.americanforests.org) is the nation's oldest nonprofit citizens' conservation organization. They work to protect and enhance the natural habitat of trees and forests in order to grow a healthier world. Planting trees saves energy, money, and tax dollars, helps clean our air and water, cools our cities, protects natural habitats, and contributes to a better way of life for all people.

This year, American Forests has committed to planting 1 million trees – with the goal of at least 30,000 trees from French rabbit wine sales. These French rabbit groves will be planted in the Mojave Desert Mountain Communities (CA), Cranesville Swamp Preserve (MD), Applegate River (OR), and Emiquon Preserve (IL).

Jean-Charles Boisset, President of Boisset America says, "We are extremely excited to partner with American Forests. For many years our family has relied on the environment to make wine, and it is only natural that we want to give back and protect it."

Deborah Gangloff, Director of American Forests, agrees, "We are thrilled to partner with a brand like French rabbit, which takes the environment into consideration during every step of the winemaking process. We hope to plant many French rabbit groves throughout the year!"

SAVOR THE WINE. SAVE THE PLANET.
